

*d*istinct*i*on, *d*ividing out the void, from the void

The mirror does not know it's a mirror until gazed upon

Roads do not fork when land furrows, but instead when your brow

Steps where light has not yet shone and your steps, shining light

Broken knows the shape of what it was to be whole

The snake bites its tail exactly when it has forgotten it is a snake

That which eats of its own body and drinks of its own blood sated, and thirst ever — slaked

The mark — new — The hand — the same hand

— The hand — not the same hand
